in•elements is an architecture and design practice founded by architects Maitri Uka and Anushri Shetty. Our collaboration began while working together at Architecture BRIO, where we discovered a shared philosophy: that architecture must be both deeply responsive to its environment and resonant with its inhabitants.

Maitri brings a sustainability-driven approach, grounded in her Master's from the Institute for Advanced Architecture of Catalonia, Barcelona. Her expertise focuses on regenerative design and natural materials, emphasising climate-responsive systems, an approach shaped by her contribution to the widely recognised and published project, The Voxel.

Anushri integrates a refined sense of spatial storytelling and detail oriented approach. A graduate of the Academy of Architecture, Mumbai, her background includes national and international design recognition, such as representing India at the London Design Biennale. Her work is defined by context-sensitive detailing and a profound commitment to human-centric design.

By bridging technical rigor with these sustainable human-centric narratives, in • elements creates spaces that harmonise ecological consciousness with the lived experience.
